EXPERIENCE

Johnathan Cook joined The Lighting Practice in 2013 after graduating from The Pennsylvania State University where he obtained a Bachelor of Architectural Engineering with an emphasis in Lighting Design. He gained hands-on experience in the industry through several internships in theatrical lighting and electrical engineering. Johnathan's passion for architecture transformed into a passion for architectural lighting design while attending school at Penn State. He was inspired to pursue a career in lighting design through his realization that architecture can be altered/manipulated in countless ways using light. In 2016 and again in 2019, Johnathan taught lighting design as an adjunct professor for the Drexel University Department of Architecture + Interiors.
